

Pension robbery

Talks with Ministers have revealed the shocking scale of the pension cuts planned by the government for the public sector. Cuts have been proposed that could save the government tens of billions, and mean that the overall value of public sector pensions is cut by a third.

The proposed changes are based on the recommendations of the Hutton report, and include:

- A doubling or tripling of contributions – to raise £2.8bn to help pay off the deficit
- Raising the pension age from 60 to 65 and then to 68
- Forced ending of all current final salary schemes and transfer for future service onto a ‘career average’ pension scheme
- Government modelling, that shows future pensions will be designed to deliver between 20-50% less than current

We face the worst ever attack on public sector terms and conditions.
